gums which results in gums turning red, becoming sensitive and sometimes swelling and bleeding. If plaque is not removed hard formations appear around teeth which in turn form calculus. Ultimately, plaque or calculus start destroying the gum tissue, which is in contact with the teeth. This process leads to the formation of gum pockets. These pockets are filled with plaque which results in damage to the bone that carries the teeth. Gum diseases progress slowly without causing any pain. Most people who have a gum disease don't even know about it.

What is dental plaque?

Dental plaque is an amorphous, sticky, gelatinous, spotty yellowish mass, which forms as a thin layer on teeth. and under the gums' edge. It consists primarily of bacteria that secrete acids, toxins, allergens and other harmful substances. That is why dental plaque is not only a cause for caries but also causes inflammatory diseases of the gums.

Why does dental plaque build up?

The building up of dental plaque is a natural process. The mouth cavity is normally inhabited by many kinds of bacteria. Bacteria are microscopic living organisms but not all of them cause diseases. Some bacteria are even useful to the human organism. Bacteria have the property of sticking to the surface of teeth and forming a thin film. However, with time, if it is not cleaned regularly and thoroughly, the layer of dental plaque increases in thickness. What's even more unpleasant is that not only the quantity but also the virulent potential of the plaque increases because the harmful microorganisms in it grow in number.

What is Stomatitis?

Stomatitis is the name of the inflammation of the mucous lining of the mouth. Stomatitis is caused by viruses and bacteria. The inflammation spreads onto the mucous of the cheeks, tongue, as well as the gums and as a result the mucous becomes reddish and swollen, causing pain when eating. Sometimes even small ulcers are formed ranging in number from one to many. Parodontic diseases or as most people call them – gum diseases, are chronic bacterial infections, which slowly damage the bone and the gums that support the teeth. If this infection remains uncured it can lead to loss of teeth. The main cause of this infection are the bacteria and their toxins in the dental plaque.

Important!!!!

Calculus is mineralized (hardened) dental plaque. It strongly irritates gums and is one of the most common “beneficial” factors for the appearance and development of paradontosis.

Parodontopathy.

The bacterial flora of devitalized teeth is a powerful allergic factor in cases of parodontopathy. The bacterial foci in the mouth cavity and in teeth determine the development of allergic diseases that damage the joints, kidneys, heart, blood vessels, eyes, skin and other organs and systems.

Is there a solution to this problem – Yes, there is! – We are the solution.

What is SANTAMENT

SANTAMENT has a markedly anti-parodontic and anti-carries effect. Everyday protection for teeth and the dental cavity is provided by the active components and an extracts complex.

SANTAMENT is the everyday protection for your teeth and mouth cavity.

SANTAMENT - for pregnant women with parodontosis and an increased risk of developing preeclampsy – a complication in pregnancy which is marked by increased blood pressure, albumen in the urine and swellings.

Over the various stages of changes in the body – puberty, pregnancy and menopause, women have significantly higher hormonal levels compared to men. These hormonal changes increase the risk of gum diseases and parodontitis, which in turn increases the risk of losing teeth. Some women can even display the so-called menstrual gingivitis – the appearance of bleeding and swelling of gums just before the start of menstruation which disappear after its end.

SANTAMENT – in cases of appearance of aphthae caused by a virus or poor immunity. Small vesicles form on the mucous lining of the mouth that are quickly inflamed. A secondary infection is developed. The sores are very painful.

Why do we need SANTAMENT

SANTAMENT - is a powerful aggressive product that attacks the virulent micro-flora in the mouth cavity immediately after use.

SANTAMENT - Removes the organisms causing bad breath in the mouth cavity.
